DEEP WATER HARBOR.

Interesting Interview with Mr. Judson Bent of City,

Who Attended the Deep Water Convention at Fort Worth.

His Impression of the Resources of the Lone Star State.

Widespread Ignorance concerning the Advantages of Colorado.

A representative of this paper had a very pleasant interview yesterday with Mr. Judson Bent, who returned from Fort Worth, Texas, on Saturday, where he attended the recent deep water convention as the representative of the Colorado Springs board of trade.

This convention said Mr. Bent was held for the purpose of calling the attention of congress to the fact that Texas with her 600 miles of coast line had not a single harbor, which ocean vessels could enter, and requesting national aid in making one or more such harbors as soon as possible. The convention was attended by the representative men of Texas and a deep interest was manifested in its proceedings. The Colorado delegation were gladly welcomed to participate in its deliberations, and General R. A. Cameron of Denver was made its president.

The convention was enthusiastically in favor of the project, but took no action regarding the location of either of the harbors. There were two factions in the body. One composed of the advocates of Galveston and the other of those favoring Aransas Pass.

The Colorado delegates went on their arrival, placed in a rather embarrassing situation. It had been reported that they had declared in favor of Galveston as the place for one of the proposed harbors, and the Aransas Pass people left some hesitancy in admitting them to the convention, but the delegates from this state assured the advocates of both places that they were entirely unprejudiced in the matter, and only wished to see the Lone Star state successfully carried out. No declarations were made in favor of either place, and the delegation occupied a neutral position on this subject during the session.

After the convention adjourned the visitors were taken to Galveston, Corpus Christi and San Antonio. At each of these places they were treated with the utmost consideration and courtesy. The citizens vied with each other in showing favors to the Coloradoans. Mr. Bent was much impressed with the wide and commercial importance of Galveston, the harbor at Aransas Pass he described as being one of the best on the Texas coast, and San Antonio he regarded as one of the most flourishing cities in the south.

If congress determined to make the necessary appropriations for one or more harbors, Colorado will be placed as near to the seaboard as Chicago for the harbors proposed will be of sufficient size and depth as to admit ocean vessels of the heaviest draught.

The following extracts from Major Ernst's last annual report show the method and cost of the improvements proposed at Galveston and Aransas pass. Major Ernst has charge of the surveys and investigations for the deep water harbor:

GALVESTON BAR.

"Under the new project the object of the improvement is to deepen the channel so as to admit sea going vessels of the deepest draught, the natural depth upon the bar at mean low tide being about 12 feet."

"The order of construction is to first raise the present south jetty to its full height, five feet above low water mark, then build the north jetty out to the crest of the bar, and then complete both jetties to their full length. The estimate of cost for completing the two jetties to the crest of the bar, is three million dollars, and for completing to 30 feet depth beyond the bar, is four million more, or in all, seven million dollars.

ARANSAS BAR.

"It is proposed to abandon so much of the old line of the south jetty as curves northwesterly, and by an easy change of direction southwesterly to conduct the jetty by the shortest line, to deep water. A north jetty is proposed, which shall be parallel to the outer portion of the south jetty and 2,000 feet from it. Both jetties are to extend out to the 20 foot curve, to be 12 feet thick on top at their inner extremities, increasing to 24 feet thick at their sea ends; their crests to be five feet above mean low tide and to be composed of torredo proof material throughout, the foundation being simply a buried base of ordinary rip-rap. They are expected to secure and maintain a channel depth not less than 20 feet. The cost of the new works is estimated to be one million six hundred and eighty-eight thousand four hundred dollars.

Mr. Bent was surprised to notice the profound ignorance concerning Colorado which he found existing at nearly every place which he visited. When informed of the great extent of the state's territory its immense natural resources, commercial advantages, together with its scenic attractions, the Texans were at once interested, and many with whom Mr. Bent conversed signified their intention of visiting Colorado at an early day.

As the representative of the local board of trade he left no opportunity unimproved for setting forth the advantages of Colorado Springs. At a banquet given the Colorado delegates at San Antonio, he spoke of the scenic attractions of this locality, in such a way as to elicit many expressions of astonishment and curiosity.

In speaking of the growth of Texas he regarded it as simply wonderful. Railroads were being constructed in nearly every direction, and the beautiful farming country in the Pan Handle region was being rapidly settled. At present cotton and corn are the staple products, though nearly every variety of fruit can be cultivated with success.

The Denver Texas & Fort Worth railroad Mr. Bent has done wonders for. Ever since the road was declared open for business its facilities both for passenger travel and freight traffic have been taxed to the utmost. He thought that the best way of advertising Colorado Springs throughout Texas was by the circulation of pamphlets and circulars descriptive of its advantages as a summer and health resort. He predicted that the more this city was advertised the greater would be the number of people who would come here.

On his return home he was met by a gentleman from Texas who presented a letter of introduction which he had received from a gentleman with whom Mr. Bent became acquainted at Galveston. A large number of Texas people will attend the convention to be held at Denver, August 26th, which will include delegates from the west and northwest, and which, it is expected, will arouse a widespread interest in the matter of securing the deep harbor. Several of the gentlemen who will attend the convention from Texas informed Mr. Bent that they would certainly visit Colorado Springs and Manitou.

BASE BALL.

An Exciting Contest at Pueblo on Sunday Afternoon.

Over one hundred people went to Pueblo on Sunday afternoon, on the special excursion train to witness the [illegible] and the Colorado Springs clubs. About [illegible] people saw the game, which was an exciting one throughout. In the absence of DeWitt, Jenner, of the Pueblo Pastimes, played first short, and barring a few bad errors played a good game and batted well. F. McMahon pitched a winning game and was supported in fine style by "Red" behind the bat. Lynch redeemed himself for his bad work on Saturday and played his position without an error. When the Five Points made seven runs in the second inning the admirers of the local club became somewhat discouraged, but after that inning the boys got on to Connell and pounded him in a lively manner. The following is the score:

THE OHIO ENCAMPMENT.

Preparation by the G. A. R. in this Section to Visit Columbus.

DENVER, July 23.—The encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Columbus, September 9th to 14th, this year, will be the largest and best arranged affair of the kind ever known. Already upwards of seven hundred acres have been set aside for tenting grounds. Camp Denison, the quarters of a million, from the business centre of Columbus, will be the camping grounds of the department of Colorado.

In view of the extensive and elaborate preparations which are being made, for the entertainment of visiting posts, it behooves every G. A. R. man in the departments of Colorado and Wyoming to fix his plans to accompany the excursion. The line of travel has not yet been decided upon, when the committee have done so information will be published in all parts of the department and official notice sent to all posts.

Gen. Jack Browning says that the movement of the Colorado-Wyoming department upon Columbus will be one of the epochs of modern warfare. He estimates his fighting force at something over six hundred men, one hundred cases of Pomery sec. and five demijohns. He will advance on the outposts of the enemy in sixteen Pullman cars, each sumptuously upholstered in cut glass and red liquor, with a screaming war eagle on the poop deck of each coach. The exact time of the bombardment cannot be positively stated, but General Browning will lead the attack himself and has arranged with Matt. Clarkson, of Columbus, to have three hundred ambulance and ten barrels of ice water in waiting at the close of the engagement.

A Criminal Captured.

CHICAGO, July 23.—A. V. Bradley, former clerk for the jewelry firm of Rosenthal & Co., Denver, was arrested here Saturday night by a detective agency on complaint of the Denver firm, charging larceny. Yesterday Colonel Hawley, chief of the Denver detectives, arrived in the city and took him back to the mountains. The cause therefor was the robbery of his employers of $2000 in watches, jewelry and cash. Fast company and a desire to investigate the cost were the causes of the young man's downfall. He is married and is well known in the mountain metropolis.

INDIAN UPRISING.

Canada Threatened with a Serious Revolt in the Northwest.

The Country Greatly Alarmed---Troops Hurrying Forward.

Fears Felt for the Safety of Besieged Settlers.

The Uprising More Extensive than that of Two Years Ago.

Canada's Indian Revolt.

CHICAGO, July 23.—A Daily News Winnipeg special says: The Skeena river revolt continues to cause great excitement. Local militia is prepared to start for the scene of the outbreak on short notice. A messenger arrived from Hazleton to-night. He says that when he escaped the Indians were still laying siege to Hudson's Bay fort, where all the white population is gathered. The garrison, he says, could not hold out much longer, and he fears the troops now on the way there will not arrive in time. General Middleton, who commanded the troops during the last rebellion, has again been called upon to direct the troops in this revolt. He has wired the militia authorities of British Columbia as follows: "I can put 7,000 men on [illegible] for the scene.

It is said the Indian tribes in that region are pretty well divided against one another, and that probably some of them would side with the whites against their enemies. A short distance above Skeena river lies Duncan island, where dwell a ferocious and bloodthirsty band of Indians known as the Metlakahtla tribe, which gave so much trouble to the government a few years ago, but afterwards fled to some point in Alaska. This tribe has signified its willingness to join the rebellion, and is reported on its way to Hazelton. The rebellion is much more serious than that of two years ago, as expected by those who know the character of the redskins now on the war path.

Orders were received from Ottawa tonight, where it is said most alarming intelligence has been received. The governmental battalion, which was first at the front in the last rebellion, has been ordered to hold itself in readiness. The greatest excitement prevails here.

The Coercion Debate.

LONDON, July 23.—In the commons today Smith moved the second reading of the bill dealing with charges and allegations against members of parliament. He said the government offered a commission of inquiry upon precedents. It rested with the house to say how complete the powers of the commission should be. Sir James Hannon would be president and Justices Day and Hatch would be the other members of the commission.

Parnell said it seems Smith had a friendly hint from counsel for the Times. In consequence of which the inquiry was to be extended not only into his personal conduct but in the acts of the league in America, Ireland and Great Britain. It was evident the case as regards the forged letters was going to break down. He demanded that the government limit the scope of the commission to what Smith originally proposed, namely charges against himself and other Irish members. Allegations against the league could not come before the commission as affecting him. They were the most cruel and infamous charges ever made against a public man. He could demonstrate that the letters were forgeries. He admitted he had communications with John Devoy, but those communications were solely in regard to political matters and were open to the fullest scrutiny. He also admitted making a speech at Wexis in favor of boycotting. He believed boycotting did good then, but had ceased to advocate it after the passage of the arrears bill of '82. To make the inquiry judicial the government ought to definitely specify the charges and also provide for the scrutinizing of documents upon which the charges were based. It was of vital importance to Irish members to see those documents before the commission began to sit.

How thorough was the subject proved during which cries were heard for the attorney-general. No member of the government responding, Gladstone expressed surprise that the government did not answer Parnell, and declared that there must be an answer. He was not prepared to give that unqualified confidence in the commission which Smith appeared to entertain. It was in the power of the government to make a selection of commissioners, a selection which would have commanded warm acclamation from everybody. The government ought to make definite charges against a definite person. There ought to be no skulking. The letters were really the only new charges, and Parnell must have an opportunity to examine them in order to face the accusations. A more deplorable error was never made than when the attorney general undertook to conduct the case of the Times. Unless Parnell's conditions were conceded the country would be driven to the conclusion that the proposals were made to be refused.

Matthews, home secretary, maintained that whatever Webster had said was solely in his capacity as counsel for the Times. The commission surely could be trusted to deal impartially.

Matthews argued that the charges were inseparable. Doubtless when seeking to inflict punishment, charges against the accused should be most specific and defined, but when the object was limited to the discovery of truth such defining was unnecessary. [Loud Parnellite laughter.] The present attitude of the Parnellites caused a suspicion that they desired to evade inquiry, or at least hamper and obstruct efforts to get at the truth. One of the capital points of the charge was that members professing to carry on constitutional agitation had arranged a basis of operation with the dynamite faction. Would the country be satisfied if these charges were not fully probed? The government thought not, and could not consent to limit the inquiry.

Sir Charles Russell said he would prefer a libel action before the most bigoted partisan jury in London to trial by a tribunal constituted on the unfair and disadvantageous terms proposed by the government, the object of which appeared to be not to bring guilt home to the individual, but to the discredit of the party.

After a vigorous speech by T. P. O'Connor, the debate adjourned on motion of Labouchere.

Montana is taking the lead in the production of the precious metals. The mines now producing seem to have staying qualities, and it is likely to maintain her position for some years to come. The Helena Daily Herald publishes the following report of some of the most important dividend paying mines in the territory:

The first six months of 1888 have made a good record for Montana dividend payers and justify the prediction that [illegible] will exceed even last year's liberal declaration of three millions of dollars.

The total amount paid by Montana mines from January 1 to June 30, 1888, was $1,475,000, distributed as follows among the different companies:

Drum Mountain	$1,200 00

The Boston Advertiser points out the danger from the large immigration of the pauper classes of Europe in the following strong language:

The recent announcement that during the first six months of the current year 94,000 wretched Italian immigrants alone, to say nothing of the thousands of other nationalities who have landed at New York is startling, and the supplementary announcements that thousands of these miserable people are now wandering about that city in enforced idleness and in a condition bordering on starvation is not at all surprising. If the increase of ignorant and pauper immigration continues in the future as it has during the last few years, New York will not be the only city that will be thronged and burdened and burdened by this invasion of the human scum of Europe; the entire country will be cumbered by it as by a devouring, life-sucking pestilence. The interests of labor will suffer from it, and public and private charity be taxed beyond endurance. Already the public charitable institutions of the country are being burdened with alien paupers, and the jails and prisons are being overcrowded by them. Shall we continue to permit our land to be made the poor house of Europe's pauperism, and the hospital ground and prison house of Europe's criminals? Our citizens of foreign birth as well as the native born ought to appreciate the urgent necessity of at once answering this vital question in the negative, all citizens being equally and individually interested in at least diminishing, rather than increasing, that which threatens to become a curse of the most demoralizing and ruinous proportions. This monstrous evil is growing month by month, year after year, at a dreadful rate, and yet our public authorities at Washington are afraid to say or do anything toward checking or stopping it. They are afraid of the effect any proposed interference might have on "the party." The politicians of both parties in congress are too demagogical and cowardly to propose any measure of practical legislation to stem the tide. While they can not but see the formidable danger that threatens the country's and society's great interests, and that common patriotism suggests a restriction if not an absolute suspension of alien immigration at once, yet, for fear of the "foreign vote," they prefer to let the country "go to the dogs" rather than interpose to save it from "the dogs." It is an illustration of the cowardice of politics and the timidity of that kind of statesmanship which lacks the essential element of patriotism.

It is very foolish for us to attempt to make laws which shall prevent our mechanics from competing with the pauper labor of Europe while we allow this pauper labor to land by the steamship load in New York. The contractors are employing this labor at very low rates, and it is reducing wages almost as much, practically, as though we had free trade. If our laws made it much more difficult for these foreigners to become citizens there would not be so many come into this country. Unfortunately most of these alien people can vote as soon as they declare their intentions. The result is that neither party nor any ambitious politician dare say anything against any movement to restrict this immigration. But the time is coming, and it is not very far off, when it will be seen that the safety of our institutions demands that the conditions for citizenship among foreigners shall be very much limited. Every corrupt movement in our large cities has had its main support in this foreign vote. It is absolutely irresponsible, and has no sympathies whatever that are American. One brave man has spoken out on this question and it will probably end his political career in New York. Abram S. Hewitt favors fourteen years residence before any foreign-born person can become a voter. We should prefer to add to this an educational test. In this way few of the ignorant people that come from Europe could vote, but their children, who would have some sympathy with American institutions, would be able to.

The New York Independent wrote to the Rev. M. L. Haines of Indianapolis, pastor of General Harrison, for some facts about his church relations. Mr. Haines replied fully. From his letter we take the following:

For some time before the war Mr. Harrison was superintendent of the Sunday school, and after his return from the army was for a number of years, up to his election as United States senator, the teacher of the Congregational Bible class for men. So successful was he in this work that he drew to the class a large number of the leading men in business and professional life. I often attended the services and members of the churches of different denominations in the city not a few of whom spoke with enthusiasm of the instruction and the inspiration to a true life they received while members of that class. One of its former members said to me yesterday: "General Harrison always had a clear conception of the truth in his head, and he had that truth also on his heart."

Amidst the press of professional engagements he somehow so managed as to be rarely absent, and during one of the political campaigns, when he was speaking six days in the week, insisted that his appointments should be so arranged that he could get back to Indianapolis Saturday evening, and thus be enabled to meet his class Sunday morning. The faithfulness to duty thus exhibited has ever been a marked characteristic of the man.

This faithfulness shows itself also in the regularity of his attendance upon the Sunday and mid-week services of his church and in the loyal and thorough way he meets the responsibilities that rest upon him as an elder. He takes hold of his duties with both hands earnestly. "Our responsibility to God" is a phrase I have heard him use a number of times in his prayers, and in such a tone as to make it clear that it is one of the great truths that shape his thinking and conduct.

Those who hear General Harrison, when called upon to lead in prayer in the Thursday evening service in his church, can not but notice the simplicity and chasteness of expression, the humility of spirit and the deep sense of reverence that characterize his utterances. I venture to allude to this because the real disposition of man's heart often comes to its clearest betrayal in his prayers.

There is about General Harrison an utter absence of pretense or affectation. He discards any attempt to make a show of himself, and would be the last person to speak or act for mere effect. Open and straightforward in both manners and actions, he lacks that quality of a politician which makes one expert at "pulling wires" and "laying pipes." Generous in his benevolences, he has always taken a hearty interest in the various charitable organizations of the city, and his generosity among the Roman Catholics, Hebrews and Protestants alike attests to the breadth and genuineness of his sympathies.

In religious and charitable activities he has had an earnest helper in Mrs. Harrison. For a number of years she was the teacher of the infant class in the Sunday school. She takes a leading part in the missionary and social work of the ladies of the church, and is prominent in the management of the Indianapolis orphan asylum and other public benevolences.

Those who would like to read what I see the Independent calls "a speech of remarkable power" will find in General Harrison's "Danville address," printed in the Indianapolis Journal of November 22, 1887, his views of the evils of the liquor traffic and his ringing denunciations of an alliance between the Republican party and the liquor traffic. General Harrison is emphatically an anti-saloon republican. In regard to the license which the issue has been joined here in Indiana his utterance has given no uncertain sound. He has declared strongly in favor of local option and increased restriction to the extent to which public sentiment can secure and maintain them.

I will not presume to draw aside the veil that conceals the home life of General Harrison and his family, yet I feel free to say that it is a Christian American home of the noblest type, where the affection that binds its members is purified and strengthened by faith in God and where from the family altar that was erected more than a third of a century ago, there goes up each day the utterance of thanksgiving and confession and prayer to the Heavenly Father.

From the above it would appear that Harrison is a good deal of a "Sunday school politician," and we are sure this qualification will not injure him in the caucus. It will be an admirable offset to "free whiskey." A man who can receive such a character as the above is safe in any position in life. Some of our statesmen when they enter public life find little time to devote to any religious duties. It is to Harrison's credit that his religion is an every day affair, which is not suspended for politics or anything else.

The Poll Tax.

To the Editor of the GAZETTE.

What would an American think were he traveling in a foreign country to be approached by an official just as he had gotten nicely lodged in a boarding house or hotel, with a notice to walk up to the city clerk and pay a poll tax of two dollars or go to jail for contempt? Would he not say, I would not live in such a country, this is tyranny. I will not submit. But, Mr. Editor, this very thing is being done in this city, and where is the justice or sense in it? We come here to be treated with respect and not to be robbed. The city might as well have an officer at the depot to demand from every man, as he alights from the train, the sum of two dollars for the privilege of remaining in your city over night. Is it lawful, is it right, is it done elsewhere? Yours respectfully,

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

DESCRIPTION OF THE MOST COSTLY MAUSOLEUM IN AMERICA.

How the Grounds Surrounding the Vanderbilt Tomb Have Been Laid Out—A Most Beautiful Place of Rest for the Dead—Expenditure by Individuals Shown.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—There are few names more familiar to the general public than that of Vanderbilt, the name of the richest family in the world; the owner of the half-million dollar palace on Fifth Ave., the Fifth avenue palace, with its three million dollars' worth of treasures of art and luxury; the virtual owners of the Central Hudson, the only four tracked road to America.

Yet the most notable and remarkable possession of the Vanderbilts is the mausoleum lately completed at New Dorp, Staten Island. This land is the old home, the native heath, of the family, and their name is a familiar one in its history. It was at New Dorp that the old commodore started his son William H., as a farmer, way back in 1840. It was here, on a little farm of seventy acres, that the future "Colossus of Roads" brought his wife when failing health compelled him to give up a position in a banking house at the princely salary of $10 a week. Here for more than twenty years he lived the simple life of a farmer, and a good one too, that he evidently remembers on the island. From the little station it is about half a mile to the old farm now owned by George Vanderbilt. This lies between the railroad and the river, but going in the opposite direction up New Dorp lane, and then turning northward on the main road, you find yourself, after about a half mile walk, at the entrance to the Moravian cemetery. Just beyond the gate is the church where Vanderbilt worshiped, and beyond that is the parsonage which was one of his gifts to the church. The road through the cemetery is the approach to the mausoleum, and is thoroughly macadamized and put in order. Around the church are many graves, where [illegible] and the family and his wife, who have been removed to the mausoleum on the hill since its completion.

As you pass on away from the commodore's first simple tomb you suddenly come in full view of the new mausoleum, which has been hidden until now by the trees lining the road. It crowns the summit of a hill, and, as you first see it, looks like a huge [illegible] and two turrets, also of [illegible] Seen from below it is very imposing and massive rather than beautiful. But when the spectator reaches the summit he finds one of the most beautiful spots in America. The approach to the tomb is by a road about half a mile long, [illegible] gradually rising for about 100 feet, when it ends in a broad esplanade 100 feet in width and 200 long, directly in front of the tomb. This is reached and laid out in [illegible] around it is a massive granite wall with smooth stone copings, open, however, for carriages to reach the front of the mausoleum.

This is now complete, or at least the outside of it is; the interior decorations of statues, carvings and inscriptions are not yet in place, nor indeed are they likely to be for some years. It is finished in marble, and will have in time a number of carvings representing "Creation," "Ascension," "Crucifixion," and five other kindred subjects. The walls of the tomb are of Quincy granite, eight feet thick; the solid foundation rock lies fifteen feet below the bottom of the entrance, that is beneath the floor of the tomb proper. It is about 25 feet high and 50 feet wide on the gable. It is nearly 100 feet deep and is divided into two compartments. The outer one is merely a vestibule extending clear across the front, with niches for statues and slabs for inscriptions. Within this is the tomb proper, a sort of chapel or long aisle, with a massive carved altar backed by heavy portales for the burial service at the farther end. On each side of this aisle are four [illegible] cells, in the floor of which are [illegible] the floor being on a level with the floor of the tomb proper. The chapel is lighted from overhead by two towers rising ten feet above the two feet of earth which covers the tomb. They admit the light through large windows of the finest plate glass two inches thick, which are protected by heavy bronze gratings let into the solid masonry of the turret. Through these one can look down on to the marble floor of the chapel twenty-five feet below.

The design of the tomb is Gothic. An immense arched doorway, flanked on either side by smaller similar doors, gives admission to the vault. It is closed by heavy double gates of bronze, made of bars nearly an inch in diameter, placed about four inches apart, with two heavy crossbars uniting them. Over these as the solid part of the door is placed a very graceful arabesque of Moorish design, also in bronze, giving the gates a very ornamental appearance and doing away with the idea of mere strength and solidity. A large combination lock, the secret of which is entrusted to but one person, holds the gates in place. Each of the smaller doorways is closed by a slighter gate, just within the main entrance is a large iron screen, to prevent visitors from looking into the interior of the tomb. Opposite each of the side doors is a funeral urn of marble; on one is inscribed, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and on the other, "In the flesh shall I see my Redeemer."

The mausoleum as it is now represents an outlay of over a quarter of a million dollars. It is built into the crown of a hill—the highest point in a plot of twenty-five acres, which is being converted into a very beautiful park under the personal direction of Frederick Law Olmsted, the designer of Central park. All the woods which surrounded the front of the tomb are cleared away, and the workmen are now engaged in cutting, filling and grading and otherwise completing the approach to and surroundings of the tomb. A force of landscape gardeners are also at work, and the result will be the conversion of the twenty-five acres of hill and dale, woodland and meadow, into the finest park in America, at an expense of over half a million dollars.

Profiting by the unfortunate experience of A. T. Stewart's family, the Vanderbilts have taken every precaution to guard against their dead being interfered with in any way. Besides placing them in so strong a tomb, the combination to whose lock is known only to a member of the family, they long kept half a dozen of Pinkerton's men on constant duty at the tomb. One of the guards watched during the day; the other five took turns during the night. They carried a time clock fitted for twelve keys, and every fifteen minutes during the night the guard visited different points about the mausoleum, inserted the little key, fastened at each place and gave it the turn which registered the exact time of his visit. Twice a day the little slips of paper were taken out of the clocks and forwarded to the New York office.

The view from in front of the tomb is one of the finest in the world. It faces the east, and looks out across the Narrows and to the ocean. Through the Narrows, seeming almost at your feet, streams an endless procession of vessels of all kinds, from the coasting sloops to the great ocean steamers. Directly from in front of you stretch the [illegible] lawns of the cemetery, with the white tombstones glistening in the sun, and beyond that are the waters of the bay, dotted by the white wings of the ships, and fretted and crossed by the curling smoke from the steamers. In the distance you can just make out the buildings massed about the Battery. Over all this moving panorama of sea and sky, of land and air, comes the strong, fresh wind of the ocean, filling your lungs with health and your soul with gladness at every breath. One could not ask a fairer spot to lie in death than this wind swept summit, looking out on the one hand to the life and turmoil, the smoke and gnome of the harbor, and on the other to the free, unknown, unsolved ocean. Surely a loyal resting place have the Vanderbilts chosen for their dead.

OHIO'S CENTENNIAL.

Ample Arrangements Being Made at Columbus.

[Special Correspondence.]

COLUMBUS, O., July 17. Columbus is clearing house preparatory to the entertainment of a million strangers. The Ohio Centennial, which opens at the state capital Sept. 4, and closes Oct. 19, is rapidly assuming gigantic proportions. Inquiries and applications for exhibition space are pouring in, and there is great enthusiasm here. Centennial committees have been organized in every county of the state. The exposition will be held under authority of an act passed by the Sixty-seventh general assembly of the state of Ohio, March 9, 1887. Governor [illegible] is president under a board of directors. Every department is in charge of able men. With the passage of the appropriation bill for the erection of additional buildings on the centennial grounds, work on the new structures began at once. The exposition will be held on an elevated plateau, comprising over one hundred acres of the state house. These grounds, the property of the state, have been transformed into a beautiful park, with bikes, drives, walks, speed and exhibition tracks, pleasure grounds, etc. Here the exhibition buildings, all of modern architecture suited to the various departments of a general exposition, are located. The exposition building proper occupies the center of the park and is approached by graveled walks communicating to all other buildings, departments and interesting sites of the park. It is constructed of stone and brick with slate roof and is sixty feet in height, while it covers 20,000 square feet of exhibition space. The interior embellishments are highly ornate. A spacious gallery with broad promenades surrounds the whole overlooking the space below. Annexes similarly constructed adjoin this building, affording additional space of nearly one hundred thousand square feet. Ample space is provided for any character of exhibits that may intelligently illustrate the progress of industrial arts during the century. Particularly substantial and attractive are the [illegible] and mechanical buildings. Thirty-six [illegible] buildings, prop- [illegible] provided with stalls and pens, have been constructed for the exhibit of live stock in the various classes. The facilities are sufficient for the accomodation of 2,000 separate entries.

Ohio has been called the mother of states. The fine arts department will be one of the great features of the exposition. Efforts are being made to have every Ohio artist represented. Her sons of the brush and chisel are responding from all parts of the world. The work of Bierstadt, J. Quincy Ward and a host of females born will adorn the walls.

In the historical departments may be placed the state's advancement from swaddling clothes to the proud position of the third great commonwealth of the republic. An old Virginia house, exhibiting the daily life of the Old Dominion in its table, beds, servants, singers and hospitality, will be represented. The pioneer cabin, with its log [illegible] patch, dogs, coon [illegible] domestic implements, and the pioneer school house, with rude attempts at training the young idea how to shoot, will mark another powerful epoch in the century's advancement. A New England village, in which the art and industries of New England will be shown, will reveal to the present generation that homely simplicity which nurtured the Puritans and that brave band of pioneers that landed at the mouth of the Muskingum river in the memorable spring time of 1788. Varied and attractive programmes of entertainment have been prepared for each day and evening of the exposition, including horse racing, land and singing tournaments, balloon ascents and [illegible]. Closely interwoven with the best interests of the exposition is the reunion of the Grand Army of the Republic in the second week of September. No less perhaps in this country will the reunion be more pleasant. Application has already been made for the entertainment of 200,000 veterans, representing every state and territory.

Its central location makes Columbus the great gateway between the east and the west. Fifteen railroad lines center in her Union depot. It is the third city in the Union both a capital, and the second without it in the United States in point of size, the population of Columbus, long the limit of easterly travel, is rich in historic interest. It has been the scene of episodes in the lives of almost every distinguished character the western country has produced in the last three-quarters of a century. Its latch string is out.

The Cleveland and Hayes club meets to-night.

Mr. George Blythin, who was reported seriously ill a few days ago, is convalescing.

Another rock quarry is to be opened up west of town by Mr. William Keller, late of Kansas.

A number of citizens still entertain hopes that a smelter will be located in or near Colorado City.

The free reading room has recently received a donation of magazines, etc., from Mrs. J. H. Wheeler, of Manitou.

The police are keeping a sharp lookout for house breakers. A few nights ago a residence in the eastern part of the city was entered and a quantity of eatables carried away.

Some improvements have been made in the Rio Grande yards, including the extension of the depot platform. The passenger business from and to Colorado City is increasing.

The police were scouring the town last night for "Kid" Swift, a gambler, who relieved a man of a gold watch and disappeared. At last accounts Swift had not been found.

A Whiskey Fight.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 23.—There is a bitter fight in progress over the whiskey question at Harlan Court House, Ky. County Judge Lewis believed a great deal of whiskey was being sold in spite of the local prohibition law. Several grocery men were tried a few days ago on the charge, but no proof was produced. The latest appears to be serious and as Judge Lewis rode out of town in the evening he barely escaped being shot by John D. Barley, one of them. He is now back into town and assembling the opponents of the traffic proceeded to search the stores of those suspected. They found liquor in several, rolled the barrels [illegible] Not one resisted their action. This action made a crowd of twenty men with Winchesters. Yesterday the whiskey men rallied and the factions encountered in the street. A hundred shots were fired but none of were killed. Five were carried off badly wounded.

Seizure of Arms and Ammunition.

RATON, N. M., July 23.—This morning an armed body of seventy five men, principally Mexicans, rode through the town of Raton and went directly to a ranch in the suburbs, and there reinstated a settler on the Maxwell grant, named George Bloser who had been a few days before dispossessed by a writ of the district court. J. O. P. McMains was [illegible] the [illegible] Sheriff [illegible] warrants have been taken to lay the matter before the governor and the judge of the district court, and it is expected that vigorous steps will follow. Immediately after his riotous proceedings McMains left for [illegible] to lay the [illegible] governor of his acts. The party left town without committing any further act of lawlessness, and all is now quiet. Great indignation is felt by the citizens of this town at the conduct of McMains, who is the same cleark that a few months ago was arrested in Washington for firing off his pistol on the steps of the capitol.

DENVER, July 23.—A meeting was held in the Real Estate exchange this evening for the purpose of effecting the organization of the Colorado State Industrial association. T. C. Henry was chosen president of the meeting and W. E. Pabor secretary. On motion the chair appointed Alexander Shaw and T. B. Hill a committee to report a plan for organization. They reported articles of incorporation which had been carefully drawn up by Judge Bentley. The report was adopted and the following gentlemen recommended for directors for the first year: T. C. Henry, D. K. Wall, Alexander Shaw, T. B. Hill, L. W. Cutler, and E. W. Alexander, Arapahoe county; H. Lee Jefferson, C. F. Faurot, Boulder; H. H. Eaton, Weld; A. E. Blount, Larimer; O. S. Hoskins, El Paso; J. W. Sweak, Bent; S. Wade, Otero. The Association adjourned and the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.

Against the Oil Monopoly.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—The interstate commerce commission to-day decided in effect that the methods by which the Standard Oil company came to be such a gigantic monopoly must cease to be used. The decision is in the case of Scofield, Schumacher and Teagle and others against the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad, involving oil rates from Cleveland to other cities. The commission decided that it is an unlawful preference when a railroad makes a rate in favor of oil shipments in tank car lots as against shipment in barrels in carload lots. The practice is ordered to be discontinued, and the mode prescribed by which this must be done is by giving the same rates on each per pound. The opinion is by Commissioner Bragg.

"You can fool some of the people all the time, you can fool all of the people some of the time, but you can not fool all the people all the time."

Merchants who publish silly advertisements ponder on this profitably.

Is it better to deal with Clothiers who claim everything and show very little, or to patronize a house that professes only what it can perform?

We have a great stock of things that men and boys wear. Our Clothing is carefully selected and well made. Choose your apparel HERE, because we can fit you perfectly, and after you once learn the merits of our goods we believe you will continue to use them.
